INTRODUCTION

Industry, Science and Technology Canada (ISTC) launched the Environmental Industries Sector Initiative (EISI) on April 1, 1989. Phase 1, expected to last for up to three years, is concentrating on two tasks. The first is to build a network - a framework for close consultation between the federal government, the provinces and industry. Through this network, we will collect, synthesize and disseminate information on environmental industries. This information will provide a profile of the sector - its size, products, services, capabilities and existing and potential customers. Such information is an essential step toward completing our second task in Phase I, which is to identify business opportunities, thereby developing the sector and its companies.

Directory of Canadian Environmental Companies

One important information source which has been developed by the EISI is a two-volume directory of Canadian environmental companies. Volume One identifies suppliers of manufactured products. Volume Two lists suppliers of services.

Volume One: The Products Directory

The nature of the manufacturing component of the environmental industry is horizontal in that it consists of a large number of firms, of which many are small, from widely diverse manufacturing fields. In terms of industry definition it is the end use of products and not the homogeneity of the products which defines the industry. Consequently, many of the products listed in this directory may have multiple uses. There are some products which are single purpose but these are in the minority.

The Environmental Industries Directorate prepared this publication based on a consultant's report augmented by lists of manufacturers available within ISTC and lists made available by several provincial agencies. All entries in this report were verified with manufacturers by mail. We have taken effort to ensure the accuracy of the information; however, we suggest the reader contact individual firms for details on their products.

For more information contact any of the ISTC offices listed on the last page or contact:
